

A new level of government — oh joy!

Re: “Region transport authority push riles some mayors,” Jan. 10.

But of course! What we need to solve our transportation problems is a new level of government. Sort of like a Capital Regional District for transport. We all know what an unqualified success that is.

And to ensure this one really does its job, we should include lots of members who hate cars, such as Victoria Mayor Lisa Helps, so it can concentrate on realistic solutions such as bike lanes and light-rail transit.

We can solve our transit problems and climate change in one go. A twofer. Why didn't someone think of this sooner? What could go wrong?
